Hello Asanikawa

Name: Leosam Undag Lagarde Hometown: Kidapawan City, Cotabato Province, Philippines Interviewed: 24th November, 2010 By Sergej Nesic (AIC)

AIC: Tell us a little about your home-town?

Leosam: My hometown is not as developed as Asahikawa but it is the capital of the Cotabato Province on the island of Mindanao, the second largest and easternmost island in the Philippines. It has a population of around 120,000 and it's fondly referred to as "A Spring in the Highland." Kidapawan comes from the words "Tida," meaning spring, and "Pawan," meaning highland. The city is located at the foot of Mt. Apo, the highest mountain in the Philippines, which is 10,311 feet above sea-level. The schools in Kidapawan are not as convenient for the students as the schools in Asahikawa and there aren't as many public facilities and institutions. In fact, I believe we only have 3 hospitals. Kidapawan is predominantly an agricultural city, so there are many trees and a lot of greenery. The beautiful natural scenery around Mt. Apo makes Kidapawan a popular tourist destination with Filipino and foreign tourists. It has a wet and dry season with December and January being the coldest, and May and April the warmest times of the year. The first settlers were predominantly Manobos, but today the main three ethnic groups are Cebuanos, llonggos, and llocanos.

AIC: What do you do here in Asahikawa?

Leosam: I'm here as a foreign exchange student on the AFS program at Asahikawa Kita (North) High School and I've been there now for just over 8 months.

AIC: What did you do in the Philippines?

Leosam: Just before I came to Asahikawa I graduated from high school, so I'm actually an out of school youth in my country. During my time at high school in the Philippines I didn't really have any free time. I didn't live with my family. Instead I lived with another family for whom I also worked. I helped with various house chores after school, and on Saturdays and Sundays I would go to the local market to work in that family's clothes store. My life was very busy, so I didn't have an opportunity to participate in club sports or hang out with friends freely.

AIC: How do you spend your free-time here in Asahikawa?

Leosam: Well, actually my host-family's house is in Takasu. It's a town next to Asahikawa. I mostly spend my free-time with my host-family, talking with them, watching movies, and cooking and eating. I really enjoy eating together as it's the best time for me to learn basic Japanese. I think the best way to learn a new language is through food and laughter and we certainly have a lot of that in my host-family's house.

AIC: What would you like to study at university?

Leosam: In the Philippines all senior high school students are required to sit for what's called "The National Career Assessment Examination (NCAE.)" This examination is aimed at determining the best-suited college course for the examinees after graduating from high school by gauging the students' abilities in various subjects. Unfortunately, I scored best (97%) in the field of medicine, and second-best (96%) in mathematics. Therefore, I have little choice but to aim at being a doctor or a mathematician.

AIC: Do you like Japanese food?

Leosam: I love Japanese food, especially Sushi and Ramen. I often eat Gyudon (beef on rice bowl) because it's so cheap. However, I don't like Natto (fermented soy beans) and Dashimaki (Japanese-style omelet.)

AIC: What is Filipino cuisine like?

Leosam: It really varies from region to region. Especially northern and southern cuisine. I come from the southern Philippines island of Mindanao and there are two major religions there. They are Christianity and Islam. In the Islamic regions they don't eat pork, so food in those regions predominantly consists of chicken and seafood dishes. Also, almost every dish is eaten with coconut. In the north they tend to eat a lot of pork. Two of the most popular dishes are Lechon Baboi (suckling pig on spit,) which is said to have been introduced by the Spaniards, and Lechon Manok (roasted chicken.) Lechon in the Philippines implies that the whole animal is roasted but it's derived from the Spanish word Leche, meaning milk; thus Lechon refers to a suckling pig that is roasted whole. Lechon cuisine is also very popular in other Spanish speaking nations in Latin America, as well as in Spain itself. However, the Filipino national dish is called Adobo. I can't really compare it to any other dish. It's uniquely Filipino. It's made with pork or chicken (most commonly chicken), stewed in coconut vinegar, soy sauce, and a range of spices, especially red pepper. The history of Abodo is guite interesting. When the Spanish first invaded the Philippines in the late 16th century they discovered the indigenous people preparing food in this way (stewing in coconut vinegar.) They termed this method, Abodo, and today there are different variants of it in Latin American countries. Balut is another uniquely Filipino dish, a fertilized duck or chicken egg with a nearly-developed embryo inside it that is boiled and eaten in its shell. My true family runs a Balut vending business. My father sells it at the market and at cock-fights.

AIC: Which countries would you like to visit in the future?

Leosam: I'd love to go to the US, Australia, and countries in Europe. I'd also like to visit Sub-Saharan Africa. One of my dreams is to see giraffes and elephants in the wild.

AIC: Have you been to Asahiyama Zoo?

Leosam: I've been there twice. Once with my host-family and the other time was on a school excursion with Kita High School. I hope to visit the zoo at least once more before I leave for the Philippines. You need to go there a few times to really see all it has to offer.

AIC: Did you make many friends in Asahikawa Kita High School?

Leosam: Yes, I've made many great friends; however, we don't often go out because they are so busy with their studies and after-school club activities. I also have friends from other high schools, especially from Asahikawa Fuji Girls' High School. I enjoy going with them to the central library in Tokiwa Park. We don't have such a large library in Kidapawan. In Asahikawa Central Library one can watch movies, listen to music, choose from a very wide range of books, and there's the beautiful view of Tokiwa Park. The library in my city is much smaller and less convenient.

AIC: What are some differences between schools in Japan and the Philippines?

Leosam: The two major differences for me are the after-school club activities and the methods of teaching. We don't have compulsory after-school club activities in the Philippines, so I was really surprised at the amount of time Japanese students spend practicing with their clubs after school. Also, in Filipino high schools the teacher would allocate the page or topic to be studied for the lesson and the students form groups and study amongst themselves. We call this peer group teaching. Whereas here, the teacher is lecturing the class throughout the whole lesson. Both methods have their plus and minuses but I seem to prefer the Filipino style as it offers more freedom and flexibility.

AIC: What do you want to become after graduating from university?

Leosam: My dream is to help make my city as developed and progressive as cities in Japan. I want to help my compatriots better their quality of life and try and bring together Christians and Muslims. I have been affected by the civil war in Mindanao and I want to contribute any way I can in creating a peaceful and stable Kidapawan. Although I haven't been directly involved in the fighting I have witnessed numerous bombings and was lucky to survive one of them 3 years ago. My mother is Maranao (indigenous people of Cotabato), so I want to become a politician. My mixed heritage reflects the mixed ethnic make up of Mindanao, and I believe this would make me the ideal person to bridge the religious and ethnic divide. My time in Japan has taught me the importance of a peaceful and safe society. I want to use this experience to help my compatriots also understand the benefits of peace and prosperity.

AIC: Thank you very much.

Leosam: Thank you.

Train Trip to Kagawa By SEO Ayumi

It is the smallest prefecture in Japan. Its specialty is noodles known as Sanuki- udon. It has a bridge linking Honshu and Shikoku called Seto-Oohashi...This would be just about all that people know of Kagawa. I even wonder exactly how many people know its location. It is true that it doesn't have many attractions but I think its location and modesty are the very appeal of Kagawa. Here are the highlights of my homecoming trip and some information on Kagawa Prefecture.

Okayama

Kagawa

Tokushima

From Asahikawa to Kagawa

I left Asahikawa on the afternoon of December 30th 2010. It took me 5 days and 20 train transfers to get to my hometown, stopping in Tokyo and Kyoto. I used 2 rail passes to make the trip as easy as possible during the holiday season. However, it was anything but easy. On the way to Hachinohe in Aomori, the train suddenly stopped in the middle of nowhere due to stormy weather. Although the train resumed running there were a series of train cancellations. I barely made it to Tokyo for the last day of 2010. The New Year had already come by the time I got out of the shower at the hotel.

From Tokyo, the train traveled to the Pacific coast in good weather and I could see beautiful scenery from the window. I had several specialties in each place I stopped. Especially good was the eel in Hamamatsu, Shizuoka. In Kyoto I went to Fushimi-Inari shrine for Hatsumoude (the first visit to a shrine of the year ) and wished for this year's good health, happiness, and a safe trip. Then, I was finally able to get home safely on the afternoon of January 4th 2011.

Kitahama alley is a commercial complex in an old warehouse located in Kitahamachō Takamatsu in Kagawa. It opened in 2000 as a trendy spot on the Takamatsu Port waterfront and it's about a 10 minute walk from Takamatsu station. There are galleries, boutiques, café-restaurants, beauty salons, grocery stores. Also, a flea market and concerts are held in the square. I really like the café 'Umie.' Inside there are different kinds of chairs, tables and books. The café has a high ceiling and harbor views are sensational. It is so comfortable that you feel like staying there the whole day.

(Editor's note: Kagawa is the smallest prefecture in Japan. It is smaller than the total area of Kitami City in Hokkaido.)

lya Valley (lya Keikoku 祖谷溪谷/Miyoshi, Tokushima)

Iya Valley is 2~3 hours away from Takamatsu by car and is said to be one of the three unexplored places in Japan. Iya Valley is a scenic place known for spectacular valleys and old vine bridges. In addition, Iya hot springs is also known as one of Japan's three major hidden springs. There are 2 hotels where you can take a bath and I went to one of them, Hikyouno-yu (秘境の湯).The large bathroom floor is tiled with local stones. You can see lush Iya Valley forests from the big window and there is an open-air bath, a mugwort scented bath, and a salt sauna. Time will pass quickly as you enjoy all the baths. Also, the hotel restaurant serves local dishes.

Kurashiki Bikan Historical Quarter (Kurashiki Bikan Chiku 倉敷美観地区/Kurashiki, Okayama)

It's about an hour and a half train trip from Takamatsu to Kurashiki and a15 minute walk from Kurashiki station. In a national survey, Kurashiki Bikan Historical Quarter was chosen as the most picturesque merchants' quarter in Japan. When the Shogunate took control of the area about 300 years ago, a magistrate's office was established and the town and its canal were developed into a trade center. The beautiful historical city has been so well preserved that when you walk along the canal you feel as if you were going back in time to old Japan. It's lined with cafés and shops, so drinking tea with a view and savoring local specialties is a lot of fun.

As mentioned earlier, Kagawa does not stand out too much in Japan and does not have a large-scale attraction like Tokyo Disneyland. However, it can be said that its appeal is unique, so please come and visit Kagawa. You're sure to find something very special.

Incidentally...I took a plane back to Asahikawa.
